“ I'm sorry for your loss. Your mom , grandmom, great grandmom. Our loss too!
Your mom had the driest sense of humor I have ever heard. She would say some off-handed or off color comment that had you thinking like - oh wait, did she really say that ? Hilarious! No filter there! I don't remember much as a kid other than Aunt Aggie was funny; I got to know her better as an adult and always enjoyed our conversations.

“ I always loved hanging out with Aunt Aggie and the whole Sullivan gang when I was a kid. She always was in a good mood despite having a house full of rowdy kids and nieces and nephews. As an adult I had the pleasure of seeing her when she would come up the street in Philly..... and stop by my Mom's house on Tremont St. I got to visit with her before she went for a walk around the neighborhood with my mom. She was a wonderful aunt!
Prayers to all of my cousins.....Your Mom is in heaven now.....Chilling out with Grandmom Baker!

“ When I was in my early twenties, I slept at grandmom and grandpops house after work for one week because grandmom was away visiting and the family did not want grandpop to be alone when She was gone. We would talk and He told me a story about Aunt Aggie one day. He was coming home and heard these little girls talking about those Baker girls and how mean and tuff they were, and they were not playing with them anymore. When He got home and saw it was His Aggie they were talking about He could not have prouder. He said when Aggie was a baby she was deathly sick and they did not know if she would make, grandpop said Her head was almost flat from laying there so long , and it brought tears to His eyes. We all know that was a lot for Him to say and He was that proud of Her.
