“ Uncle Al always put a smile on my face when I saw him, it was just how he carried himself. He would greet you with a kiss on the cheek and ask you how you were doing. You could feel that he truly did care, and always made sure to smile. My dad saw him often, and had fun visiting the race track together. During these visits he sometimes would give my dad a special coin to give to my son Max. This week I was looking on the ground in my bedroom, behind my dresser, and there was one of those coins. It must have fell off the top of the dresser and I was like "Our coin! Here it is!." A couple days later I got the phone call about his passing. I am glad I have this coin in a safe place now, and able to tell my son the stories about this amazing man that walked the earth- and how lucky we were to be apart of his family.
